

ABSTRACT

A method for killing microorganisms in water, by passing an aqueous feed solution comprising of water containing some form of halide salt into a non-
5 membrane electrolysis cell comprising an anode and a cathode, adjacent to the anode, while flowing electrical current between the anode and the cathode to electrolyze the aqueous feed solution and convert the halide salt to anti-microbial mixed oxidants.